Abstract

The aim of the current study is to examine the program of pronunciation training and its implementation from a new perspective, which is that of MA graduates. The data were obtained from 65 graduates of the Faculty of English at Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań by means of an online survey. The research questions posed in the study explore the matter of taught models and varieties of English, materials, teaching, and opinions regarding the accent the participants received. By providing a new perspective on the teaching and learning of pronunciation the study might help university teachers to enhance the pronunciation courses in their institutions.

1. Introduction

English pronunciation teaching and learning has constituted the subject of numerous studies conducted among students and teachers from Polish and international perspectives. These studies, usually adopting the form of a survey, have explored such aspects as the perception of learners' own pronunciation, teacher training, organisation of courses, application of pronunciation models, and the approaches to them. The authors decided to take a new approach to survey methodology, prompted by John M. Lewis's statement that "[...] teaching-related research questions are important, but the studies that examine them are few and far between" (2016:1).

The attitudes of Polish teachers of English towards pronunciation courses they had taught have been researched both in the context of secondary education (Szpyra-Kozłowska et al. 2002, Wrembel 2002), and tertiary education (Wysocka 2003, Henderson et al. 2015). Szpyra-Kozłowska et al. (2002) addressed the issue

* The authors would like to thank prof. Magdalena Wrembel for her guidance in devising the study.
